First Shipment Of Fresh Embryos Is Exported Into Canada

New doors for the transfer of cattle genetics between the U.S. and Canada were opened this week as the first shipment of fresh embryos was exported into Canada from the United States.

Risinger Ranch, Cody, Wyoming, in cooperation with Rio Vista Genetics, San Antonio, Texas, collected nine fullblood Simmental donor cows early in the morning of November 18 and shipped 25 fresh embryos by air to Gagnon Farms, Cheneville, Quebec, Canada where they were implanted into recipient cows that evening.

Mitch West, Director of Genetics at Rio Vista International, did the collecting and implanting of the embryos, personally carrying the sealed containers between the two locations and through customs.

Yves Oagnon, owner of Gagnon Farms, who will be purchasing the pregnancies that result from these transfers, spent much time orchestrating the paperwork in Canada. "This is an exciting moment for us," Oagnon remarked. "It allows us to diversify our genetics and build a top quality Simmental program quickly and easily."

Tom Blodger, Director of Marketing at Rio Vista International and owner of Risinger Ranch, commented that this first successful exportation of fresh embryos into Canada will open a new market for all purebred cattle producers, allowing both countries to benefit from the exchange of superior genetics.

Canada's rigid health requirements have been a detering factor to this type of exportation as the testing, paperwork, and regulations are quite lengthy and must be followed to the letter. "We started working on this exportation last May," noted Denny Shore, managing partner at Risinger Ranch. "It was worth the wait to make this breakthrough."

Not only did the donor cows have to meet the health standards and pass tests for tuberculosis, brucellosis, anaplasmosis and blue tongue, but the semen from the bulls also had to qualify for importation into Canada and pass health inspections.

Wyoming State Veterinarian, A.M. Bradley, DVM, Worland, was on hand in Cody for the entire collection procedure and personally sealed the container that carried the embryos to their destination in Canada.

1984 Simmental Sire Summary Released

The American Simmental Association has released its 1984 National Simmental Sire Summary. "This document is based upon performance records accumulated by the Association since it was established in 1968", said ASA Executive Vice President, Earl B. Peterson.

"These records are supplied by more than 17,000 individual beef producers who have become life members of the Association", Peterson said.

Progeny data is consolidated from computerized performance records on an annual basis. Breed-wide comparisons of sires are tabulated and growth, maternal, and carcass characteristics.

Date is listed in the 1984 Sire Summary in at least one trait for 1,498
